

PICTURE POST

No. 212

THE HERITAGE of FLEET STREET

April 2026

Picture Post started in 1938 for all readers, not just the rich. It used photos to tell stories and became very popular, selling over a million copies.

It supported liberal ideas, opposed fascism, and spoke out against the persecution of Jews. It also promoted social reforms like a minimum wage and a national health service.

The magazine reached nearly two million sales at its peak but closed in 1957 after disagreements among its leaders. Its photos are now kept in the Getty archive.
