The Times is the oldest national newspaper in the UK still in publication. It began on 1 January 1785 as The Daily Universal Register and was renamed The Times in 1788, becoming the first newspaper in the world to use the word “Times” in its title.

The newspaper has often led the way in printing and publishing. It was the first newspaper to be printed by steam-powered press in 1814, introduced the famous Times New Roman typeface in 1932, and launched Times Radio in 2020.

The Times also helped shape modern journalism. It was the first newspaper to have reporters in Parliament and among the first to send foreign and war correspondents overseas.

Known for its crossword, letters page and respected Law Reports, The Times has broken many major stories, including the Battle of Trafalgar, the discovery of Tutankhamun’s tomb, the first successful ascent of Mount Everest, and investigations that helped improve child protection in the UK.
