

C. Hoare & Co., 37 Fleet Street

No. 152

THE HERITAGE of FLEET STREET

April 2026

Hoare's Bank is a very old bank in London. It was started by Richard Hoare in 1672. After the Great Fire of London, he moved the bank to Fleet Street in 1690.

Richard Hoare helped rich people and only lent money to people he trusted. He became famous, was made a knight, and later became Lord Mayor of London.

The Hoare family also helped poor and sick people by giving money to hospitals, schools, and churches.

The bank building survived many difficult events, including World War II. Today, the bank is still owned by the Hoare family and is still open.

The golden bottle sign, which became the symbol of the bank, is kept in the bank's museum.

Old Banking House on Fleet Street (pre-1829)

The bank (present day)