

Number 62 Fleet Street

No. 104

THE HERITAGE of FLEET STREET

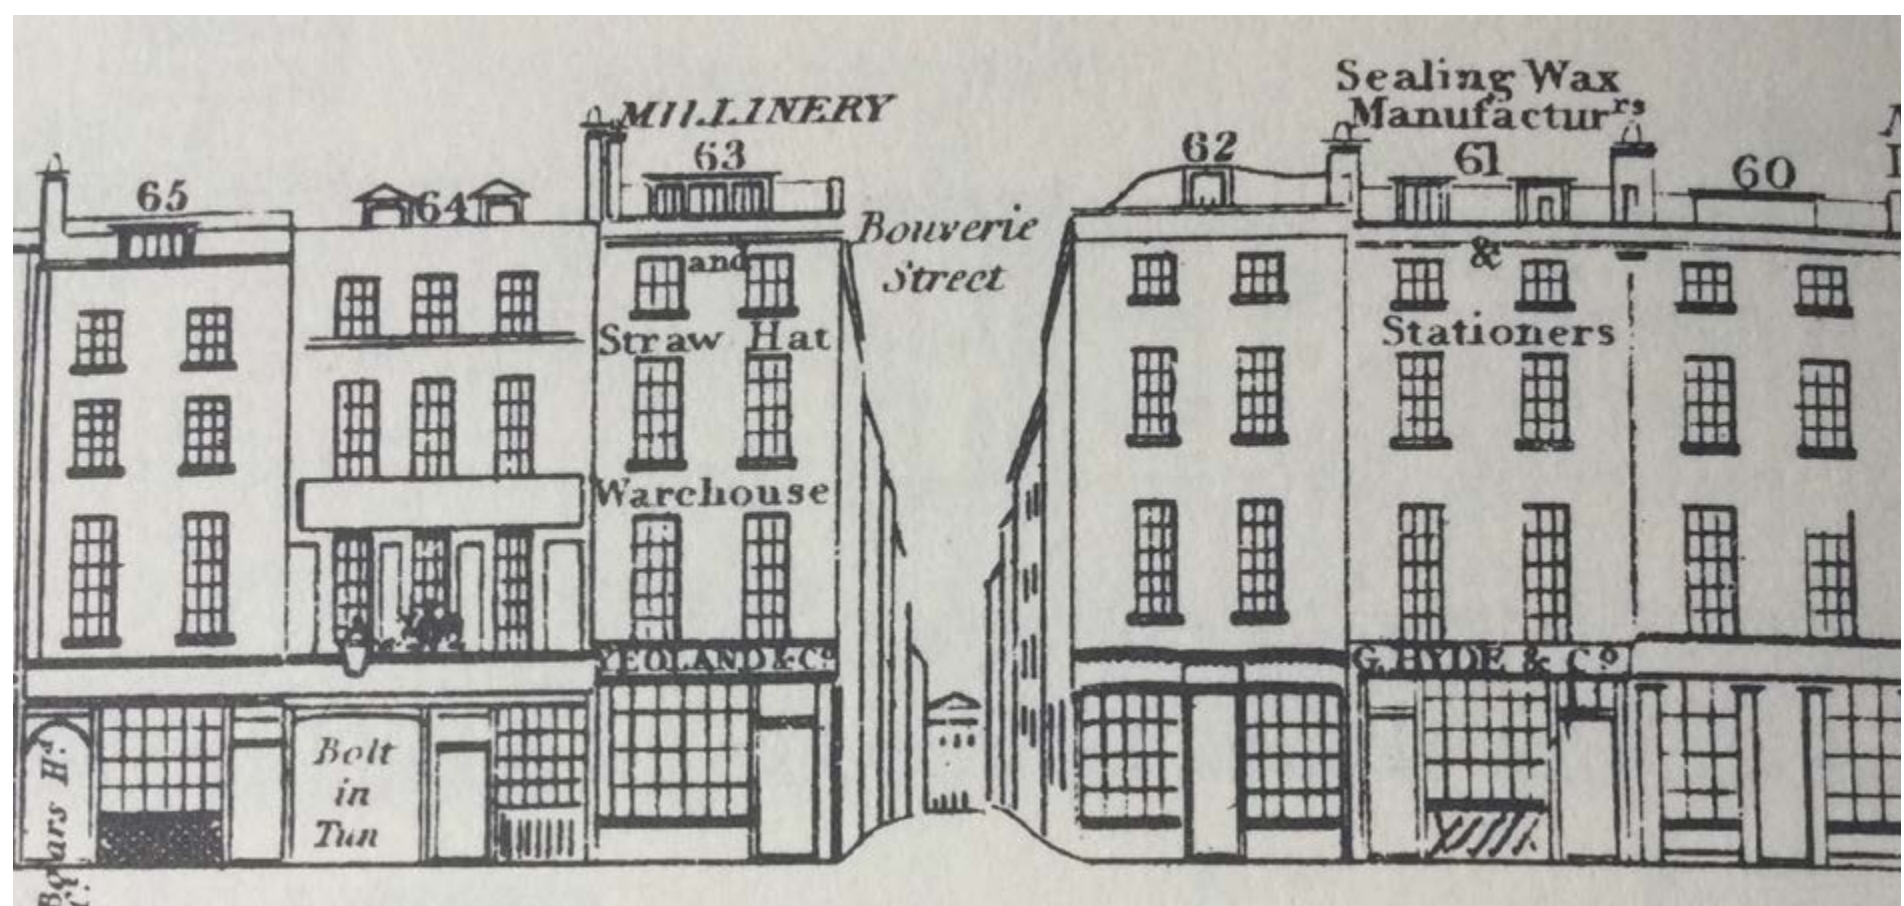

April 2026

Richard Carlile's printing office once stood at 62 Fleet Street, where Bouverie Street is today. He sold his newspaper, The Republican, and other radical books from the shop.

Carlile campaigned for political reform, including voting rights for more people and equal rights for women. The government tried to stop him by taxing newspapers and sending him to prison for his views.

His work helped win the press freedom and free speech that people enjoy today.

The website includes an 1838 engraving of this part of Fleet Street, showing the buildings, street numbers, and businesses.

From: Tallis's London Street Views. No. 15, Fleet Street, 1838