St Dunstan-in-the-West is a historic church on Fleet Street, London, named after St Dunstan, a former Archbishop of Canterbury and patron saint of goldsmiths.

The church was first built over 1,000 years ago and survived the Great Fire of London in 1666. It was rebuilt in the 1800s when Fleet Street was widened and later restored after damage during the Second World War.

The church is known for its unusual octagonal design, its famous clock with the figures of Gog and Magog, and a statue of Queen Elizabeth I. It has strong links with famous figures including William Tyndale, John Donne, Samuel Pepys, and John Milton.

Inside, the church contains historic monuments and a beautiful Romanian Orthodox icon screen, reflecting its role as a place of worship for different Christian communities.

The church of St Dunstan-in-the-West has 3 monuments: Gog and Magog, guardians of London who ring the chimes every quarter hour,

Queen Elizabeth I, believed to be the oldest statue in London, and the portrait head of Lord Rothermere
